Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Recap: Intussusception in Children Case I. - In July, 1880, a child eight months old was brought to me for treatment for diarrhea. It was much reduced in flesh and strength. I saw the child one afternoon, and recommended the mother to take it to the sea-shore the next morning, and remain on the beach during the day. The same evening the mother noticed a lump in the right hypochondriac region that moved at times towards the left side. The child passed a restless night, occasionally screaming, and the diarrheal discharges gave place to bloody passages, accompanied with tenesmus. In the morning, without seeing me or notifying me of the new symptoms, the child was taken to the sea-shore. The mother had already noticed that, after violent expulsive efforts, what she called the child's body came down. During the day the child had occasional attacks of screaming and straining, accompanied by the same bloody discharges. In the evening I was called in, this being about twenty-four hours after symptoms of intussusceptions had become prominent...
