Excerpt from The Creation of a Selling Organization The first essential to the creation of a successful selling organization is that it be recognized as the most important part of the business. This is true without regard to the price of the product which is to be sold, its quality or quantity. Disregard of this fact has caused many failures. Articles possessing unusual merit frequently go down unheard of in the swallowing sea of competitive commerce because their disposal has been entrusted to sales organizations devoid of merit, whereas inferior articles often obtain a wide market by reason of having a good sales organization behind them. There is no concern so big, nor is there one so small, that those who are responsible for its success can, without courting disaster, do other than give their best thought, their greatest energy and their closest personal attention to the sales department. Economy of manufacture, or, in the case of a wholesaler, close and careful buying, are things which should be both desired and accomplished, but they will count for little unless there is created a sufficient demand for the goods to make possible the distribution of the fixed charges over a large output. Our greatest manufacturing and mercantile concerns are great, chiefly because they have mastered the art of marketing their products with a maximum of return at a minimum of expense. It is important that the man directly in charge of the sales department should himself be a successful salesman. If the president of the company is qualified for this position, so much the better; in any event, it should generally be filled by an officer, with title and authority no...
