Excerpt from A Letter to Mr. Lambton: A Petition to the Commons, Maintaining That Ninty-Seven Lords Appear to Usurp Two Hundred Seats in the Commons House, in Violation of Our Laws and Liberties It hath been metaphorically said, that truth lies at the bottom of a well. In Magna Charta s unlettered and barbarous day, truth, in respect of representation, lay indeed concealed in a well of time five or six hundred years deep; no one then living, knowing where this well and its treasure were to be found. But in our day of emancipated reason, of cultivated intellect, and political lig t, that dark, that deep and hidden well, is become a well known fountain, not be yond man s depth; a healing fountain of cheerful, busy, popular resort, and of daily-increasing fame. Such its pellucidness, that on its bed of amber, political truth, like a brilliant set in gold, is distinctly seen in all its lustre. As superior to adamant, as a heavenly to an earthly nature, this inestimable gem imparts to the fountain s all-healing uid, so sovereign a virtue, that a single washing therein, as effectually cleanseth the believing leper of our land, as the seven washings in Jordan cleansed Naaman the Syrian.
