Excerpt from History of the Dunmow Flich of Bacon Custom We have written this little book because we are greatly interested in the good old Custom of Dunmow. The usage being curious, and so well calculated to promote domestic felicity, we deem it desirable to produce in a popular form a work on the subject. Grose says Amongst the jocular tenures of England, none have been more talked about than the Bacon of Dunmow, yet, strange to relate, to the present time no history in a separate form has appeared, hence our wish to furnish one. We agree with the poet when he sings: -It were well if our Custom so widely was spread, That every fond couple resolv'd to be wed; Would determine to please, to charm, and bewitch, That in any year they might each claim the Flich. Should this be the case a glad world would be ours, The thorns and the briars would bloom into flowers; And all might rejoice, the poor and the rich, If all would deserve and lay claim to the Flich. We have done our best to...
