Excerpt: .eastern isle, Large fragrant groves of fruit-producing trees, Sweet cinnamon, and the pink-almond s bloom. One tree apart stood eminent--alone--Whose leaf could never fade, whose kindly sap Flowed with eternal vigour, and whose fruit Shone with immortal fragrance, aye renewed. Not all the trees of Paradise could match In delicate taste that everlasting fruit: Not all the spices of Sabaeen stems Surpass its odour of divinity. Round that, those others clustered, like a band Of glittering princes round their king revered In gorgeous pomp of gems and golden hues, Or like attendant troops of opal clouds Round the chaste standard of th advancing moon. Then, when the seer was struck with dumb amaze, Staggered at myriad marvels pressing on him, And mortal senses failed to grasp the key, The golden key of knowledge--then there came An angel s voice, and whispered, Lo, the tree!...
