Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: . . . parish 40 or 50 represents the same degree of zeal and diligence. The Womans Guild usually confines itself to home help. A bazaar is often the nest egg for a small outlying chapel, when it has to content itself perhaps with but a monthly service. Substantial gifts gladden the local hospitals at Thanksgiving and Christmas, as well as at other times. The Daughters, sometimes called the Kings Daughters. sometimes after their own particular church, emulate the matrons in their church ministries; and, like them, not scorning the humbler work of cleaning and lighting fires in Gods house. They raise money, and they save money by what they gladly do with their own hands. They teach in the mission kindergartens, and start the childrens societies in the right direction. The children, whether called the Sunbeams, the Young Helpers or Little Workers, piece their quilts, voting, when complete, whether the home hospital, or the half-frozen Alaskan Mission, is to receive them. They are pretty sure to wish the Arctic. Mission School to have it, even if it takes six months to reach its destination. Each Christmas the Juniors of Seattle (where naturally Alaskan interest is strong) send a box to the Sunday School of Ketchikan. The first childs cot of the Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, was started in the small Sunday School of Corvallis, about twenty years ago. Every Christmas since the Sunday Schools throughout the state have contributed to this object, and there are now with Bishop...
