Excerpt: .evenings, at the Meetings of the Royal, the Geological, and other Societies, in whose proceedings he always took a keen interest. Occasional excursions into the country, appear to have been his only recreation. These afforded him an opportunity of prosecuting geology, which was a favourite study; and, during the last twelve years of his life, enabled him to gratify the love for angling, with which Sir H. Davy had inspired him. Towards 35 Manual Q/ C/centse1m str 1/, 3rd edition, Vol. I. Introd. p. 152. 3 Sir H. Davy thus alludes to Wollaston as an angler: Them was--alas! that I must say there was--an illustrious philosopher who was nearly of the age of fifty before he made angling a pursuit, yet he became a distinguished fly-fisher, and the amusement occupied many of his leisure hours during the last twelve years of his life. He,...
