Excerpt from 1962: Centennial Year of the United States Department of Agriculture The nation was approaching the maturity Washington mentioned. It was growing in population, expanding westward, developing industry, building railroads, competing in new markets. Agriculture also was changing - from a subsistence type of farming with most of the food and fiber processed on the farm to a commercial type of farming. The new textile. Industry was taking weaving from the home. Agriculture also had new tools - the steelyellow fever, malaria, and other insect - borne diseases of humans. In recent years, Depart ment research developed mass-production methods for penicillin, and created the blood plasma extender Dextran and other medical products.
